History

Like most of the land in the Yarra Valley, the land was mostly cleared of native vegetation and used for agricultural purposes for most of the past 150 years. In 1977 the Cameron family, who used the land for beef cattle grazing, sold the land to the State. Cattle grazing continued until 1993 when revegetation works began in the park. In 1998, Longridge Park campground was opened to the public for overnight camping.

Yarra Valley Parklands

In 1929 it was recognised that rapid urban development in Melbourne after the 1880s had resulted in a lack of parklands to meet community needs. Finally in 1971 the state government announced the 1430ha Yarra Valley Park as a vital wildlife corridor and natural recreational space for Melburnians. The parklands now form a significant 'backbone' of interconnecting trails, linear parks, wetlands and waterways throughout the metropolitan area. The ongoing effort revegetating the parklands, mostly with the aid of valued community groups planting about 30,000 trees per year, has seen the return of a number of significant wildlife species.

Flora and Fauna

At Longridge the vegetation communities change from Red Gum and Manna Gum Riparian Forest beside the river to Red Box and Yellow Box Escarpment Woodland up the hill.

Large native mammals such as Eastern Grey Kangaroos, Wombats and Koalas are slowly increasing in numbers as the revegetation programs extend their habitat from Warrandyte. Numbers of smaller mammals such as antechinuses and possums are also increasing which, in turn, is attracting predators like the Powerful Owls and the Grey Goshawks.

A variety of parrots are commonly seen at Longridge. There are several species of bats, such as the Eastern Free-tail Bat, that frequent the park at night
